Description

Introductory description

This module will introduce students to core areas of policy contention, innovation and development within education, as practiced in the English educational system.

Module web page

Module aims

- To explore the historical context in which education policy has been developed in England.
- To identify and explore a range of cultural and social issues affecting the present educational landscape in England.
- To analyse the position and status of education within current political and economic narratives popular in England
- To explore developments in the professionalisation of teaching and to identify the different demands experienced by education professionals.
- To critically explore the implications of recent policy developments on a range of pedagogical factors, including curriculum design, assessment processes and issues relating to access and inclusion

- To explore how education and learning takes place outside of formal schooling environments and to explore the status and influence of informal learning experiences on the learner and the wider society
  - To consider policy and practice impacts from the perspective of further and higher education.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

This module will introduce students to core areas of policy contention, innovation and development within education as practiced in the English educational system. The module will include the following components:

- (i). Investigating how current educational policy and practice has been shaped by various education acts and understanding the historical context in which contemporary English education policy and practice has been developed.
- (ii). Identifying and evaluating how major reviews of education conducted in the twentieth and twenty-first century have shaped developments in educational policy and practice. Through seminar and group discussion students will critically analyse the extent to which suggestions and ideas expressed in educational reviews have been embraced, rejected or diluted by policy makers.
- (iii). Exploring policy and practice changes in relation to formal education assessment.
- (iv). Critically evaluating the extent to which policy changes affect issues relating to educational equity and inequality.
- (v). Exploring how social and cultural changes within English society have affected both the English education system and the design and implementation of its curriculums.
- (vi) Exploring historical perspectives alongside current provision on teaching training. Critically evaluating the values that underpin contrasting approaches to teacher training.
- (vii) Evaluating trends relating to the marketisation of education in England.
- (viii) Considering the impacts of informal learning experiences on pupils' and students' identity as learners

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- - To appreciate the historical context of educational policy and practice.
- - To develop understanding of the cultural and social issues affecting the present educational landscape.
- - To appraise the position of education within the political and economic landscape of England.
- - To understand developments in the professionalisation of teaching and the changes to professional standards experienced by education professionals.

- - To have a critical insight into the implications of education policy on pedagogical practice.
- - To be aware of the influence of informal 'non-school' learning experiences and the impact these experiences have on learners attitudes to formal education.
- - To understand how policy relating to early years, primary and secondary education impact on how further and higher education are structured and accessed.
