Module aims

The module aims to enable students to understand and evaluate the use of ethnographic research methods in the study of faith-based and religion-related education. Students will be taught the principles of ethnographic analysis and critically analyse the use of ethnographic methods in relation to a selected context(s) and in particular research projects.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

Working within the context of independent study and group-supported seminars each course participant will be required to identify issues of practical professional relevance within the context of their personal and individual experience as a research-based reflective practitioner and amenable to satisfactory academic exploration and illumination by means of ethnographic research approaches.

Within this context of independent study and group-supported seminars, each course participant will be required to develop knowledge of research literature relevant to identified issues.

The course context is designed to provide access to the ethnographic methodologies capable of exploring and illuminating research questions, including reference to:

- Ethnographic methods of research used in the study of Religions, Society and Education.
- Strengths and weaknesses of ethnographic research.
- Examination of ethnographic approaches to particular issues in the study of Religions, Society and Education.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- 1 Apply a systematic knowledge and critical understanding of selected areas in Religions, Society and Education to some contemporary issues, demonstrating knowledge of current/research debate and methodological awareness in relation to the use of ethnographic research methods and approaches;
- 2 Independently gather, organise and critique ethnographically-based research data from a broad range of primary, secondary and scholarly sources, communicating concisely in writing using sophisticated concepts and vocabulary appropriate to Religions, Society and Education, and proposing new hypotheses where appropriate;
- 3 Critically relate research, theory and practice in a creative and reflective way, according to professional/vocational context where appropriate;
- 4 Critically evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of using ethnographic research in the study of Religions, Society and Education;
- 5 Critically analyse and evaluate the application of specific ethnographic methodology to particular issues in the study of Religions, Society and Education.
