Description

Introductory description

Film Aesthetics approaches film first and foremost as art, and lets you grapple with the fascinating questions raised by doing so. The module considers how key, longstanding problems in the philosophy and sociology of art might apply to the medium of film, as well as aesthetic issues that seem to be raised by audiovisual media in particular.

Module aims

To equip students with the ability to formulate nuanced, well-evidenced answers to questions such as:

- By what criteria should we evaluate films?
- What does it mean to interpret a film, and how should we go about it?
- What role should moral and political judgements play in aesthetic judgement?
- What role should the nature of a medium play in our aesthetic judgements?

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

SECTION 1: What are aesthetic judgements?

Week 1: Smith, Murray (1996) 'Film Spectatorship and the Institution of Fiction', The Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism, 53: 2, 113- 127.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- (1) Be familiar with debates surrounding several key issues in the philosophy and sociology of art
- (2) Be familiar with some of the ways in which such debates might apply to audiovisual media specifically
- (3) Have a command of the relationship between aesthetic judgements and other forms of judgement
- (4) Have improved their skills in academic researching and writing

Research element

Both essay and seen-examination options will require research.

Interdisciplinary

The history, aesthetics and sociology of art.

International
