Description

Introductory description

This module will introduce students to the ways in which art history has developed as an academic discipline, illustrating the manifold ways in which it has been practiced by scholars from its beginnings in the 19th century to the present.

Module aims

Students will become familiar with a range of approaches used to write the history of art. Students will read extracts from some of the most significant figures in the discipline and will gain a critical understanding of the ways in which theoretical premises and methodological processes have informed their approaches to works of art.
