Description

Introductory description

This is a core module that introduces business students to the fundamentals of financial and management accounting and its broad range of users.

Module web page

Module aims

To develop students' ability to prepare financial information in line with accepted accounting principles.

To provide students with knowledge and understanding of the uses and applications of accounting information as a business tool in decision-making, planning and performance assessment.

To develop students' awareness of the underpinning principles and limitations of accounting information and the impacts of these on its use.

To enable students to analyse and interpret accounting information, in ways that support business decisions and management.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

Financial and management accounting as important sources of business information – what is it, who needs it and why it is important.

How accounting information is produced – use of technology and human practice – its nature and limitations.

Financial accounting Key financial statements – Income Statement, Statement of Financial Position and Statement of Cash flows. Assets and liabilities; revenues and expenses; capital and reserves. Accounting equations. Key underpinning concepts and principles of financial accounting (e.g. going concern, money measurement, historic cost, accruals, prudence and objectivity), where judgement is used. Recognition issues (i.e. what's included in financial statements) – e.g. revenues. Measurement (valuation) issues – e.g. non-current assets, inventory, receivables. Differences between cash and profit and the importance of liquidity. Interpretation of financial statements and basic ratio analysis.

Management accounting Cost-Volume-Profit Analysis for short-term decision making – cost behaviour, break-even, contribution, margin of safety, and limitations. Full Absorption Costing for decision making – cost categories (direct/indirect), allocation, apportionment and absorption of costs, over/under recovery of overheads, uses and limitations. Introduction to Activity Based Costing. Budgeting for planning and control – purposes, preparation and basic variance analysis.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Explain the objectives of financial and management accounting as business tools, providing information for planning, decision making, control and the performance evaluation of management.
- Interpret the main financial statements drawing on appropriate accounting techniques.
- Explain the relevance of costs to the decision-making process and use a range of costing techniques to produce information that supports management decision-making.
- Understand how budgets are used for planning and control purposes, and the limitations of these.
- Appreciate the main underlying concepts and limitations of accounting information and the impact of these limitations on the use of such information.
