Module aims

The module is designed to:

- 1.To explore business ethics in and as practice;
- 2.To examine ethics from a embodied perspective, foregrounding the role of experience, emotions, bodily presence and performativity;
- 3.To develop understanding of the internal culture of an organisation and factors that inhibit and/or enhance ethical behaviour and relationships;
- 4.To understand how moral and ethical judgement, reasoning and decision making is shaped and the role that self knowledge and reflective practice play in this.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

To create a meaningful culture of participation that is both effective, sustainable and socially responsible we cannot think about organisational structure and the management of this without thinking about what behaviours are required to realise these in practice.

Business ethics is a huge and complex field, which cannot be fully explored or comprehended within the context of a standalone module. What Acting Responsibly sets out to do is explore the question of what it means to act responsibly in business today together with how business ethics play out in practice. Designed around corporate morality and ethical reasoning, the module is contextualised using high profile scandals, past, present and emergent, placing emphasis on self-inquiry and collective responsibility. The ethical dilemma's faced by individual and or organisations will be used to question the values we hold, what and who shapes them and how they inform the choices we make. Using drama and theatre based approaches, students work in participatory and collaborative ways to help negotiate the the ambiguity and uncertainty that surrounds Business Ethics today. Exploratory scene work, scripted and improvised, will be used regularly as learning resources with which to identify the conditions that inhibit, enhance or reproduce behaviours in the workplace, and the extent to which ethical behaviour is contextual and situational.

There is an expectation and reliance on reflective practice as being central to both understanding and knowledge development in this module, supported through individual deliberation, reflective practice and open dialogue. Content will actively encourage participants to make connections between good management and principles that often influence and shape attitude, expectations and behaviour. The critical distance provided through in-role work will present students with alternative ways to express themselves, for example by stepping into the shoes of Leaders, Managers, and employees. Participants will adopt the role of documentary filmmakers. The film component being introduced and used as a sense-making tool designed to help conceptualise understanding and engagement with content and their critical understanding/reflection and analysis of materials and experiences introduced. The approach encourages critical engagement and consideration of the conditions required for building a healthy socially responsible organisation and what role business education can play in producing socially responsible and ethically motivated graduates.

Subject knowledge, whether lecture-based or workshop generated will provide the opportunity for students to actively engage with and reflect on a range of materials e.g. academic literature, current issues, interviews, and student experience. Inclusive pedagogies being used to generate debate and encourage dialogue, and the reflections collected weekly used to build a community of practice, who together share ideas and opinions on experiences encountered. The podcast material is designed to accompany the practical workshops, extending and deepening themes introduced and experienced in class, for example; the role of behaviour, attitude and emotion in management and organisational life, including how people make decisions, model responsibility and create opportunities for embodied leadership, emotions at work, cultures of power, practical wisdom, governance.
