Module aims

This module is concerned with evidence and proof in criminal proceedings. Traditionally, courses on Evidence focus on the rules applied in court relating to the admissibility, reception and weighting of material tendered by the parties as evidence. Such rules are also a subject of study in this module, but we also consider the processes by which evidence is created (eg the police interview or the identification parade) and the processes of mutual disclosure prior to trial, by which the evidential material is exchanged between prosecution and defence.

The module will encourage students to develop a sound theoretical understanding of the principles underlying evidence law and the tensions within it. Students will consider concepts such as proof, reliability and fairness and will consider the proper allocation of functions as between prosecution and defence in an adversarial system.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Have a complete understanding of the foundation principles of the law of evidence as well as detailed knowledge of highlighted areas. Have an understanding of the way in which the law of evidence fits into the process of proof which the courts use. Show an awareness of the law of evidence as a site of social and political critique
- Understand the processes through which facts are socially constructed, rather than legal entities. Understand the social context in which rules of evidence emerge and the extent to which they condition legal knowledge and process
- A firm understanding of the way in which the rules of evidence apply to hypothetical cases. Begin to develop the ability to use evidence arguments as a mechanism for influencing law reform
- Undertake sophisticated doctrinal analysis through problem solving. Be able to locate practical problems within an appropriate contextual framework. Appreciate some of the limits of reform through law
- Capable of independent research through advanced doctrinal analysis, comparative analysis or empirical engagement with social actors. Capacity to organise themselves into groups in order to identify and address issues

- Present an articulate statement of the law or critique of the law in a way which demonstrates a command of the relevant legal and policy knowledge. Appreciate the value of the process of argumentation in helping them to interrogate their own views as well as those of others. Understand that question-formulation itself has both analytical and ideological dimensions
- Demonstrate a basic grasp of the methods of social science as an aid to understanding the operational practices of the law of evidence Have the skills and competence to trace relevant legal provisions in both UK and other jurisdictions
