Description

Introductory description

What is it to do research in philosophy? Among other things, it is to engage in philosophers' particular ways of "doing philosophy", which reflect themselves in particular ways of arguing, writing, and discussing. What is distinctive about philosophy is that right from the earliest Presocratic thinkers up to the present day, this activity of doing philosophy is itself subject to philosophical investigation and reflection. In this module, you will become part of this tradition, by both improving and reflecting on your practice of doing philosophy.

Module aims

The module aims to improve students' ability to study and reflect on philosophical methods, and develop research skills in preparation for further scholarly research, by engaging with a broad range of philosophical issues that are central to different philosophical traditions. For each seminar, students will have read in advance a philosophical text representative of a distinctive philosophical tradition, approach and methodology. Students will give an oral presentation on the text to initiate guided critical discussion of the reading. During these discussions students will be guided in their reflection upon philosophical methods, research techniques, and the most effective ways of presenting arguments and ideas orally and in writing.
