Description

Introductory description

N/A

Module aims

This module will:

- (1) explore the significance of animals to society and culture - both historically and contemporaneously - and how changing relations between society and nature, human and animal have been conceptualised sociologically;
- (2) explore the philosophical and moral underpinnings of social and cultural attitudes and practices towards animals and their implications for animal welfare and animal rights;
- (3) investigate how human-animal relations relate to social change and the way non-human animals are incorporated into social relations;
- (4) explore the ways in which society, social action, agency and notions of the self have been understood and ask whether they can be mobilised to analyse the place(s) of animals in society and culture;
- (5) investigate the implications for sociology of post-humanist critiques of anthropocentric understandings of the world.

This module explores the place of animals in society and culture and how this varies cross-culturally and over time. It will address the importance of animals to the organisation and development of society, exploring notions of 'co-evolution', 'domestication' and 'human exceptionalism' and the philosophical and moral underpinnings of human-animal relations. Animal studies, as a newly-emerging interdisciplinary area of study, draws on different theoretical traditions to make sense of its subject matter. Sociology has been particularly slow to take up the challenge of studying animals and the module will investigate why this should be so and whether studying animals poses a particular problem for sociology as a discipline. It will consider different aspects of human-animal relations and how taking animals into consideration might challenge our understandings of society.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

- (1) What is an animal? Introduction to the module and to human-animal studies
- (2) Co-evolution and social change - domestication
- (3) Animals in industrial society – from beasts of burden to fashion accessories
- (4) Kinship with animals
- (5) Cultures of meat eating and farm animals
- (6) Cultures of masculinity
- (7) Social movements, animal welfare and animal rights
- (8) Species, social construction and power – animal ethics
- (9) Post-humanism and the animal challenge to sociology

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Explain how relations between humans and animals have changed over time
- Evaluate different ways of theorising human-animal relations
- Critically assess the material and cultural significance of animals in different types of society
- Research, using a range of methods, the key social, political and ethical issues influencing the position of animals in contemporary societies
