Description

Introductory description

The term queer has been doused in drama since its late Eighties' appearance in Anglo-American criticism and activism. This module reckons with its accomplishments, troubles and enduring potential for film and television studies.

Module aims

This module asks what is queer about historical and contemporary screen cultures? What can queer theory and practice teach us about race, nation and geopolitics, as well as gender and sexuality, in relation to audiovisual texts? What can they tell us about viewing habits, platforms and pleasures of the past, present and future? This new module will move with and beyond questions of representation and reception, to consider the social, national, political and technological contexts of contemporary queer screen culture.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

W1: New Queer Cinema

Queer World Cinema:

W2: France
W3: Japan
W4: Brazil
W5: Taiwan
Queering the screen:
W7: Queer Jews
W8: Transnational web series
W9: Streaming
W10: TV archive

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- To understand queer theory and practice as they relate to film and television's past, present and future
- To analyse the complex relationship between gender, sexuality, race and nation in historical and contemporary screen cultures
- To distinguish the queer potential and productivity of audiovisual texts' pleasures and platforms
- To articulate understandings in an original, critically engaged and persuasive manner
- To demonstrate an ability to offer nuanced and detailed analyses of film and television texts
