Description

Introductory description

Recent theorisations of law have posited the emergence of a global legal consciousness and practice that challenges conventional understandings. We witness today the state transcended in many areas of political, economic and social relations where identities, interests, aspirations and languages of normative understanding derive from non-state sources. From transnational economic relations to global security policies, from environmental consciousness to human rights discourses, from cross-border conversations of regulatory and bureaucratic agencies to globally connected anti-systemic movements, social interaction at the local, national and transnational arenas are now influenced less and less by the hegemonic discourses and control mechanisms of statist law. State sovereignty, thus it would seem, stands challenged as the foundational principle of legal imagination.

The course examines this emergent legal reality through an examination of both the theories and practices of divergent consciousnesses of 'global law'. Global law, in this respect, is not taken as an un-contentious terrain of imagination. Through the lenses of competing visions – those of globalising elites and those of subjects/objects of ordering - various histories and narratives of global regulation will be considered, as will the tensions and confrontations between them examined.

Module aims

Central to the approach of the course will be a perspective which views law as contested, both as a matter of 'theory' and as a matter of social struggle, as world-orders are imagined and effected. During the course, you will be familiarised with different and differing theories of 'global law' and be enabled to critically evaluate them by reference to examined realities of the life-worlds of law.

You will be encouraged to adopt socially grounded analytical perspectives and to present analyses of global law through examinations of specific regimes of governance. The course, therefore, seeks to enable you to acquire analytical and advocacy skills necessary to engage with law in a globalising world, informed by a concern for social justice and human development.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

BASIC ISSUES ON GLOBALISATION AND LAW: The aim of this session is to consider, by way of introduction, what we understand by such terms as globalisation, global governance and global society in relation to law.

FROM COLONIAL INTERNATIONAL LAW TO THE UNITED NATIONS CONCEPTION OF WORLD ORDER: Global law purportedly marks a departure from the national-international duality of the conception of law in society. We will trace the evolution of global law through the world ordering phases of colonialism through to the United Nations Charter system and identify the key features of the transition from the 'rights to conquest' to the 'duties of cooperation'.

GLOBALISED (B)ORDERINGS: THE PLACE OF THE STATE: In this session we will examine the role of the state under conditions of 'globalisation'. We will examine the ways in which the state functions 1) as a conduit of 'supraterritoriality' and 2) as a space for protection and belonging. Particularly of concern will be our understandings of constitutionality and democracy that underpin the 'modern' statist order as it operates as 'cunning states' within a global order.

GLOBALISED (B)ORDERINGS: THE SUBJECT OF CITIZENSHIP: The 'citizen' stands as the ubiquitous subject of politics and law. The focus of this session will be to interrogate the theory and practice of citizenship and political belonging under the pervasive realities of globalisation. What does it mean to be a 'citizen'? Are we witnessing the emergence of a 'global citizenship'? How do we understand the differentiated regimes of bordering that enable global movement for some but not for others? To what extent does 'citizenship' provide a meaningful conception of belonging and non-belonging, inclusion and exclusion?

THEORIES OF GLOBAL LAW: The idea of Global Law directly challenges the presumed fixity of the national-international duality in mainstream political-legal conceptualisations of order. To what extent do the realities of 'global/transnational' relations find explanation and expression in such theories of global law? What role the bordered 'state', and the 'citizen', in this conception of global political-legal relations?

MOVEMENTS FOR SUBALTERN LAW: We will examine the 'subaltern'/'activist' conceptions of the world we live in, and the prospects that these provide for a different possibility of imagining the 'political' and the 'legal'.

THE LAW AND POLITICS OF PEOPLES' TRIBUNALS: In this session, we consider the theory and practice of peoples'/citizen's tribunals? How might a theorisation of these rebellious 'doings' challenge the dominant conceptions of politics/law? We will consider various examples of peoples' tribunal initiatives in this light.

LOCATIONS AND SPACES WITHIN GLOBAL LAW WORLDS: The concluding session will provide for an opportunity for reflection on the implications and possibilities for individual and collective action in the light of our discussions. We will consider the implications of our locations of thought and directions of action. Ultimately, this is about how we locate ourselves in the 'world'.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Demonstrate an in-depth understanding of the distinctions between 'national', 'international' and 'global' law, of the histories of global ordering structures, the significance and impact of 'globalisation' on the role and functioning of the state and international institutions, and on the imaginations and practice of law and politics.
- Examine and understand legal, economic, political and social materials on issues of 'global law'.
- Examine and critically evaluate the spaces and possibilities of 'subaltern' political-legal praxes.
- Demonstrate an ability to work effectively in groups to examine specific topics related to the module
- Demonstrate an advanced ability to deliver effective written and oral presentation skills
- Demonstrate an advanced ability to assess critically the legal, political and activist texts relating to the subject of global law and political practice.
- Demonstrate high quality research, interpretation and drafting skills in relation to various genres of political and legal texts.
