Module aims

The module aims

- to introduce students to a range of key texts and issues in classical phenomenological philosophy.
- to foster a sound understanding of the philosophical issues in the debate between the two main representatives of early phenomenology.
- to explore the ways and respects in which the arguments and positions of the philosophers discussed are of continuing relevance to current debates in a variety of contexts.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

1 Husserl's early concept of intentionality in Logical Investigations. The central distinctions: objectifying/non-objectifying experiences; sense/object; signitive meaning/meaning fulfillment. The logical primacy of the self-givenness of objects. Why senses are not objects.

2 Methodological reflections: Husserl's distinction between constitutive analysis

(Konstitutionsanalyse) and genetic explanation. The phenomenological reduction as non-Cartesian preliminary suspension of metaphysical and genetic theory for the purpose of pure constitutive analysis

3 Husserl on experience and judgement. Pre-predicative intentionality and the concept of the horizon.

4 The limits of objectification: Husserl on pre-objective self-awareness and temporality. The subject as essentially embodied (the body-subject).

5 Husserl on the levels of objectivity. The constitutive function of otherness (intersubjectivity).

6 Heidegger's criticism of the Husserlian concept of consciousness and the phenomenological reductions in History of the Concept of Time (1925). The emergence of the question of being and the idea of a fundamental ontology.

7 Heidegger's preliminary analysis of 'being in the world'. Availableness and occurrentness. Environment and publicity (das Man).

8 The ontological structure of world disclosure: self-understanding/ability-to-be; affective condition; falling; discourse/articulation.

9 Heideggerian temporality.

10 Heidegger on mineness, authenticity and finitude.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- have attained a good grasp of the central arguments and ideas of Husserl and early Heidegger.
- participate in an informed way in debates on the philosophical issues addressed in their writings.
- evaluate critically the merits and the relevance of phenomenological approaches to the issues discussed in the module.
- use a range of conceptual and theoretical resources of phenomenological philosophy competently and productively.
