PH9E3 Topics in Moral and Political Philosophy

Module web page

Module aims

The module will offer a critical engagement with key debates in moral and political philosophy. It will deal with a range of problems revolving around the tension between moral autonomy and political authority, focusing in particular on the following two questions: on what grounds, if any, can individual moral agents be placed under a moral duty to obey political authority? And is deferring to political authority compatible with acting as autonomous moral agents? In addressing these two questions a number of fundamental issues in moral and political philosophy will be critically examined, such as "why is consent morally important?", "can morality make room for associative responsibilities?", "how important is the difference between our duty to help and our duty not to harm?", "under what conditions do we incur fair-play obligations?", "how should we understand equality?". Particular attention will be paid to the question of how best to characterize practical reasoning in relation to issues of obedience.
