Module aims

This module aims to introduce students to political economy, which is a long-established and vibrant field of political studies. It will serve as a foundation for future years of study on related modules. Its principal objective is to provide a genuine foundation to political economy and help first-year undergraduate students to begin thinking like political economists. The module will be built around a series of 'big questions', each of which will speak to experiences of the contemporary world, but equally each of which will be designed to unlock debates about key concepts in the foundations of political economy through discussions of those experiences. The aim is to offer a distinctive optional module that is fully complementary to other PAIS modules at this level.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

An indicative schedule of topics is as follows:

Week 1: Introduction: What does it mean to be studying political economy?

Week 2: States and Markets: Are there economic contradictions of democracy consistent with a political business cycle?

Week 3: The Market Economy: What exactly is a market and how do we know when we are acting within one?

Week 4: Growth and Development: Why do some countries have faster growth than others and is growth necessarily a good thing in all circumstances?

Week 5: Financial Crisis: Where do economic crises come from and why has the world economy appeared to be increasingly prone to financial crises?

Week 6: Reading Week

Week 7: Theories of Value: How do we ascribe economic value to things and what does the process of ascription tell us about the ideological structures in which we live?

Week 8: Global Inequalities: Why has global inequality increased and why does the same global economic system produce mega-riches for some in the context of grinding poverty for others?

Week 9: Class Politics: Who, what and where are the working class today, and how does class now interact with other elements of economic identity?

Week 10: The Future of Capitalism: Are we all capitalist now and is this a condition that we should celebrate?

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Demonstrate a basic understanding of how political economy contributes to the study of politics as a whole.
- Demonstrate a basic knowledge of different approaches to the study of political economy.
- Be able to relate scholarly literature theorising political economy and actual contemporary developments including very topical events.
- Be able to make informed comparisons of various strengths and weaknesses of different political systems or regimes.
- Ability to analyse critically complex ideas, both orally and in writing, in relation to the issues influencing the transformation of the economy.

Assessment

You must pass all assessment components to pass the module.

Students can register for this module without taking any assessment.

Assessment group A1

	Weighting	Study time	Eligible for self-certification
Assessment component
Briefing Papers	100%		Yes (extension)
A 2,500-word research log to consist of five briefing papers, each of 500 words, to be submitted as a single portfolio at the end of the module (100% of the total mark)
Rationale:
Briefing papers are designed to develop analytical skills to reflect upon a series of core issues in political economy, and to condense and organize knowledge in a succinct and lucid fashion. They are designed to introduce students to the process of conducting independent research in a short format.

Reassessment component is the same

Feedback on assessment

Feedback on the research log comprising the five briefing papers will be returned within 20 working days of submission

Formative and summative feedback will be provided in accordance with standard PAIS practice.
