Description

Introductory description

This module will introduce you to various forms theatre takes on the African continent. It will consider the influences on theatre (social, political and economic) in specific countries, while highlighting the diversity of cultural and linguistic contexts even within a country. It will consider points of comparison regarding approaches to form, engagement with history and issues of gender.

Module aims

The aim in this module is to trace the diversity of theme and form of theatre in Africa in the post-colonial context. It will particularly focus on the influences on the development and changes (social, political and economic) that have affected the development of theatre in Africa. It will look at a diversity of cultural and linguistic contexts (North, West, East and Southern African), where necessary looking at plays in translation.
