Description

Introductory description

PH362-15 Hobbes and Rousseau

Module aims

The module aims to examine and critically assess many of the central ideas found in Hobbes's and Rousseau's political philosophy. The arguments and ideas of these philosophers will be compared with each other and discussed in their own right. Particular issues to be discussed will include Hobbes's and Rousseau's differing views concerning the natural condition of humankind, human nature, freedom, morality and the character and constitution of a legitimate political order. The emphasis will be on a close reading of key texts and discussion of the issues raised by these texts.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

1. Hobbes on human psychology, motivation and freedom
2. The function of the state of nature in Hobbes's political philosophy
3. Morality and the laws of nature

4. The source, nature and limits of political obligation
5. Natural freedom: Rousseau on independence
6. Inequality and domination
7. The aims of the Social Contract
8. The general will and popular sovereignty
9. The role of pity in Rousseau's moral psychology

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- To have a systematic understanding and knowledge of many of the key ideas and arguments found in Hobbes's and Rousseau's major writings in the area of political philosophy, and the issues they raise in connection with the nature of the modern state and the individual's place within it. The students should also be able to understand how Hobbes's and Rousseau's positions on key issues differ and to be able offer an independent assessment of them.
- To communicate clearly and substantively in speech and in writing on the issues raised by their close reading and critical analysis of the relevant texts. They should be able to engage with these texts in a way that appreciates their potential relevance to present-day concerns while being sensitive to the historical context in which they were written. The students should also be able to evaluate critically the relevant secondary literature.
