Description

Introductory description

The module offers a space for thinking about how we go about conducting the academic analysis of politics. It introduces some of the core ideologies in political science, explores some of the main themes today, and considers some of the major drivers of political change. The aim is to provide students with the conceptual tools needed for more advanced study of politics in years two and three of their degrees. The module mixes theory and political practice. The assigned readings come mostly from political science and political theory, but also includes perspectives from overlapping disciplines such as sociology, economics, geography and history.

Module aims

The principal aims of Introduction to Politics are to:

- introduce students to the study of politics through discussion of the main issues and ideological perspectives;
- introduce students to the core concepts used by political scientists and political theorists;
- provide an introductory discussion of political and policy-making processes and of the political ideologies that inform them;
- to consider the nature of, and prospects for, political transformation and the significance of these for the study of politics;

- encourage students to link their own experiences of politics to the ways in which the subject is studied; and
- to provide a venue for both discussion and debate and the development of presentation and communication skills.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

Lectures will cover topics on 'What is Politics?'; 'Power & Authority'; 'Methods of Analysis'; 'Actors, Institutions & Ideas'; 'The State'; 'Democracy & Legitimacy'; 'Political Parties & Pressure Groups'; 'Depoliticisation'; 'Ideology'; 'Conservatism'; 'Liberalism'; 'Marxism'; 'Feminism'; 'Environmentalism'; 'Post-Truth & the Media'; 'Representation & Participation'; and 'Political Change & Revolution'.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Be able to identify and discuss critically several of the main theoretical perspectives and debates in political science
- Have the knowledge foundation for more detailed and in-depth study of political theory, political processes, political institutions and political change in second and final year modules
- Be able to write appropriately constructed essays in a critical and analytical fashion
- Have developed enhanced study, independent learning, and communications skills
