Description

Introductory description

Religion is at the root of some of the most contentious and controversial issues in contemporary politics. Debates around security and violence, the role of faith schools, public policy issues such as same-sex marriage and abortion, clashes over freedom of expression, gender rights, advances in medical technologies, and tensions around multiculturalism are just some of the ways in which religion and politics have intermixed. This module explores the political context of religion through an interdisciplinary approach that draws on a variety of research agendas in fields such as political science, sociology, cognitive science, psychology and history. It examines a wide range of issues, including the nature of religious belief, the historical and social development of religion (and non-religion), debates around secularism, the rise of fundamentalism, morality, and religious violence.

Module aims

The aims of this module are as follows:

- To introduce students to the key themes and issues relating to the relationship between politics and religion in the modern world.
- To facilitate an inter-disciplinary analysis of religio-politics in theoretical, conceptual and empirical terms.
- To encourage critical thinking about the impact of religious belief on contemporary political issues and institutions.

- To enhance student research skills through the collection and analysis of information from a wide range of sources.
- To develop student abilities to present a well made, coherent and logically consistent argument
