Module aims

The dissertation module aims to develop and showcase the student's critical abilities, as they plan, research and deliver an extended, independent research project. Each student will work under the guidance of an academic supervisor, and draw upon extra support provided by a series of workshops and lectures. The dissertation allows the student to make an in-depth study of a particular topic, author, or genre; to undertake extensive independent research; and to write at length on their chosen subject. The length of the dissertation encourages the development of argument and analysis, the marshalling of evidence, and the reading of the relevant criticism. The dissertation allows the student to develop and demonstrate bibliographical and presentational skills. It encourages the student to manage their time effectively, to organise their ideas, and extend their previous studies in creative directions.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

In spring and summer terms of the year before the dissertation, the student will discuss the dissertation project with their personal tutor. The personal tutor will help the student to identify a suitable supervisor for their project. There is also a workshop (60 minutes) to help students draft their dissertation proposal, which usually takes place in Week 7 of term 2.

Over the Easter break, the student will write a draft proposal, to include a title and c. 200-300 words briefly describing the project. The purpose of the proposal is to show that the project is realistic and workable; to show that the student has some existing knowledge of the topic; to show that the student has thought about the scope of the project; and to show that the student is aware of some current research on the topic.

The student will submit this draft proposal in writing to the potential supervisor, and discussion with the supervisor will allow the proposal to be improved. At this stage the supervisor will formally undertake to supervise the project, and the convenor of the dissertation module will formally approve the project.

Before the end of the year before the dissertation, the student will attend two workshops which will help them begin to plan and research their dissertation over the summer break. These workshops will cover how to find, select, and use sources; how to conduct literature searches; how to plan the writing of the dissertation, and how to start writing.

On their return for their final year, students will have a total of 3 hours of meetings with their supervisor, spread across terms one and two. The meetings will be recorded in Tabula. At least two will take place in term 1, and at least two in term 2.

Students may submit one draft section, chapter, or literature survey of any length by the end of week 9 of term 1, and expect to receive feedback on it by the first week of the winter vacation. They may submit a full draft of the thesis by the end of week 9 of term 2. Students will arrange with supervisors the latest possible date when they will look at a full draft of the dissertation, usually no later than the first week of term three.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Students will receive two training sessions (60 minutes) at the end of their second year to enable them to begin research for the dissertation over the following summer.
- Students will have three hours of meetings with their supervisor, usually of no more than 30 minutes, spread across terms one and two.
- During the dissertation year itself, students will attend seven workshops (60 minutes each) spread across terms one and two.

Indicative reading list

A bibliography of primary and secondary texts will be developed by the student, under the direction of their dissertation supervisor. Since the module comprises mostly independent study, it is up to the student to seek out secondary or archival material in the course of their research. Supervisors will guide and encourage this research process, which may include audio-visual material, and artefacts from special collections.
