Description

Introductory description

What affects the way we speak? What is the difference between a language and a dialect? And how is power related to language? In this module we consider these and other questions and unpack the ways in which language shapes and is shaped by society. You will have a chance to look at how language works in different public and private contexts and in different multilingual and intercultural settings. Using real world data, you will be introduced to a range of different theoretical concepts and methodological approaches to help you understand, describe and interpret language use in society. The module provides a foundation both for further study of Communication and for Sociolinguistics in Year 2.

Module aims

The aims of this module are:

- to develop an understanding of different theoretical and methodological approaches to the study of language use in different multilingual and multicultural contexts.
- to introduce the students to the relationship between language and identity.
- to raise awareness of key issues in intercultural interaction and linguistic aspects of multilingualism and multiculturalism.

- to examine critically how different theoretical and methodological approaches and concepts help to understand, describe and interpret language use in different multilingual and multicultural contexts.

The module will contribute to the achievement of Course Aims #1, #2, #4 and #7:

- #1 provide a thorough grounding in theories and research findings related to intercultural interaction and linguistics;
- #2 give students an in-depth understanding and awareness of the nature of generic, discoursal and linguistic features relevant to different cultural and professional contexts;
- #4 enable students to analyse cross-linguistic features and contexts, and authentic cross-cultural and intercultural discourses using both quantitative and qualitative methods;
- #7 enable students to undertake an in-depth study of issues relating to intercultural linguistics.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

This module will explore: (a) the notion of language use in relation to different sociocultural contexts, (b) the relationship between language and identity as well as the practical issues and challenges associated with the multilingual and multicultural lives of people in modern societies. This interaction between theory and real life issues will be investigated around the following general themes:

- Language use in context
- Language and identity
- Multilingualism & multiculturalism
- Multilingual & multicultural practices in society
- Language policy and language practice
- Globalisation

Learning outcomes

Research element

All assessment includes original research project. This involves the design as well as carrying out projects on core areas of module and programme overall.

Interdisciplinary

The module is designed to provide the students with an understanding of relationships between the different disciplinary areas within linguistics, particularly socio, theoretical and applied. It also invites the students to make connections with other disciplinary areas covered in the programme particularly social psychology.

International

The module draws on cases from different contexts, including different geopolitical areas, professional environments and linguistic contexts. The content and assessment invite the students to reflect on issues of power asymmetry in the various different environments and in relation to phenomena covered in the module. The concept of social justice is prominent and is particularly relevant for critically looking into the changes in the world around us.
