Description

Introductory description

A core module which teaches approaches to critical reading of film and television texts.

Module aims

The aims of this section of the module are four-fold.

It aims to further develop fluency in the vocabulary of audio-visual criticism so that you can describe accurately what you see and hear when you watch and listen to a film or television programme.

It aims to further develop your confidence when it comes to the precision expression of your analytical thinking in both your written and spoken work.

It aims to give you an extensive opportunity to make reasoned and carefully argued interpretations of individual film and television texts, especially in relation to the validity of other published accounts and interpretations, both within group discussion and through your own reading of a variety of critical writing.

It aims to introduce to the ways in which a work of film and television criticism may also deploy a range of significant historical, cultural, social and political contexts to inform its reading of an audio-visual text.
