Description

Introductory description

This module aims to introduce students to theoretical models that were originally developed in subject areas such as English Literature, Philosophy, and Psychology and to address the ways in which such theories have been taken up by scholars within Film Studies.

Module aims

Students will engage with a range of theories that offer different constructions of textuality, meaning and interpretation. Students will gain knowledge of major shifts in theorisation by addressing key paradigms such as: psychoanalysis, semiotics, postcolonialism and queery theory. They will gain knowledge of key theorists within Film Studies, such as Wollen, Butler, Mulvey and Sobchack. Students will apply the theoretical models to specific film texts, adding a conceptual dimension to their textual analysis.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

The syllabus covers a range of theories that have been influential in their application to film. The module is structured so that a different topic is introduced and discussed each week or, for more foundational approaches/where necessary, over two weeks. Each topic is dedicated to a specific theoretical approach, addressing the primary material in the first instance, the theorists who have taken this into Film Studies and then the application of the theory to the close reading of film.

Indicative content:

Semiotics – an analysis of structuralist linguistics and the impact of Pierce's theory of signs on theorists such as Wollen and Gabriel.

Ideology – an analysis of Althusser's theory of ideology and its importation into Film Theory by, for example, Baudry and Comolli and Narboni.

Postcolonialism – an analysis of postcolonial theory and its implication for understandings of the colonial and anti-colonial gaze by film theorists such as Stam and Spence.

Psychoanalytic feminism – an analysis of Lacanian psychoanalysis and its implication for understandings of the apparatus of cinema, as well as the take up of psychoanalytic models by feminist film theorists, such as Mulvey and Silverman.

Queer Theory – an analysis of the work of key theorist, Judith Butler, and their use of film in illuminating queer theory. The broader take up of this approach within Film Studies.

Ethical Theory – an analysis of key philosophical theories of, for example, ethical obligation. The take up of these by film theorists, such as Downing and Saxton.

Crip Theory – an analysis of theories of able-bodiedness, by for example Davies and McRuer and their application to the reading of the normativity of film.

Affect and Haptic Theory – an analysis of the work of key theorists of phenomenology and the body, and their take up by film theorists like Sobchack.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- 1) To locate the development of theoretical models within Film Studies within broader interdisciplinary contexts.
- 2) To demonstrate a sound understanding of one of more areas of theoretical debate within Film Studies.
- 3) To demonstrate an ability to use theoretical language with precision and to analyse argument in a rigorous way.
- 4) To demonstrate an ability to apply theory to specific film texts and to add a conceptual dimension to close textual analysis.
