Description

Introductory description

This module covers the period from the late eighteenth century to the start of the twentieth. This is a transformative period in the history of crime and punishment in Britain moving from the 'Bloody Code' which characterised eighteenth century Britain to a punishment code resting on the prison system. The period witnessed the introduction of the police force, the rise and fall of transportation and debates about the nature of prison. The module is interdisciplinary drawing on scholarship from history, law, sociology, criminology, literature and politics. A variety of sources are considered including novels, memoirs, criminal records, newspapers and satire.

Module aims

This 30 CATS final-year module is an innovative module which involves the students in all aspects of the design and assessment. The syllabus is negotiated with both topics and primary sources selected at the start of the course in two workshop sessions. The aim is to immerse students in the reality of archival research from the very beginning of the module and to prepare them for their dissertation or assessed piece. The assessment may also be negotiated and take the form of an exhibition, play, website, multimedia resource, museum display, a conventional long essay, or any other form which is agreed by the department and the tutor.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

Note: this is an indicative syllabus. The precise content will be negotiated between students and tutor each academic year to reflect student interests and involve the students in all aspects of curriculum design and assessment as well as providing them with as many opportunities for practical research as possible. The tutor will provide template seminar outlines (with questions, sources, and bibliography) for students. The tutor, in conjunction with archivists at the MRC and Warwick Records Office, will provide descriptions of the available archives and other primary sources.

Private study description

History modules require students to undertake extensive independent research and reading to prepare for seminars and assessments. As a rough guide, students will be expected to read and prepare to comment on three substantial texts (articles or book chapters) for each seminar taking approximately 3 hours. Each assessment requires independent research, reading around 6-10 texts and writing and presenting the outcomes of this preparation in an essay, review, presentation or other related task.
