Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

It is not possible to imagine the human condition disconnected from the ethical condition. (Freire, 1998: 39)

Business ethics is a huge and complex field, which cannot be fully explored or comprehended within the context of a standalone module. Acting Responsibly sets out to do is recognise this complexity, exploring ethics not as something rule or compliance based but as practice. A lived phenomenon. Designed around corporate morality, ethical reasoning and decision making the module is contextualised using high profile scandals, past, present and emergent that help us to challenge existing assumptions about ethical behaviour and what it means to act responsibly. The ethical dilemma's faced by individual and or organisations will be used to question the values we hold, what and who shapes them, how they inform the choices we make and the actions that follow. The primary method of teaching and learning involves a theatre approach; collaborative, immersive and humanising. Over the term, learning will be encouraged through active participation and rich dialogue, whereby questions are sought and debated rather than answered. Learning encounters are designed to introduce ethics as contextual and situated, whilst at the same time developing agency self awareness in a safe and stimulating environment. Acting Responsibly ultimately involves you stepping into the shoes of others to discover new perspectives, viewpoints and ways of seeing and responding to organisational behaviours, whilst reflecting on your own. Using a theatre based approach, we work in participatory and collaborative ways to help negotiate ambiguity and uncertainty of business ethics. Exploratory scene work (scripted and improvised) are used as timeless and timely learning resources with which to identify the conditions that inhibit, enhance or reproduce behaviours in the workplace, and the extent to which ethical behaviour is contextual and judgment therefore situational. There is an expectation and reliance on reflective practice as being central to both understanding and development in this module, which will be supported through the experience of individual deliberation, active exploration, open dialogue, and debate. Learning to manage and lead others today involves self-reflection and an understanding of self in relationship to other; what we model and how we behave. To help develop self-knowledge the module turns towards the theatre, holding a mirror up to nature and engaging us in stories that question what it means to be human. Theatre is a shared experience, whereby human dilemmas are embodied and played out before us. By observing and or playing the behaviour of others we become more keenly aware of the motivations and dilemmas faced by others, the impact of choices made and more critically both the moral ambiguity and complexity of the human condition, something difficult to connect with through theory alone.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Appreciate and understand theoretical concepts relating to corporate social responsibility.
- Develop relevant arguments and examples, in order to critically engage with a range of ethical positions / perspectives and generate new understanding.
- Demonstrate the ability to critically reflect on learning encountered / contribution in lecture / workshop and group contexts.
- Appreciate and understand the role of ethics in management in relation to own values and decision making.
