Description

Introductory description

This module addresses the evolution of the laws of war (International Humanitarian Law) and the specific regimes that are supposed to govern the conduct of warfare. We shall also touch upon the complementary law regarding the use of force and in particular the customary right to self-defence and doctrines of 'humanitarian' intervention. In this context the module addresses the "crisis" of international humanitarian law in the post-Westphalian order, and the "war on terror".

Module aims

The module aims to develop:

a knowledge of the international legal principles regulating the conduct of armed conflict;

an understanding of the principal institutional structures for the implementation of international humanitarian law;

an understanding of the key issues for further development of the law and of current initiatives for change;

an understanding of the different roles played by individuals and institutions in armed conflict and the various ways international humanitarian law impacts upon their work; and an ability to apply the norms of international humanitarian law to specific case studies and be able to conduct research in the field of international humanitarian law

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.
