Description

Introductory description

This module analyses the foreign policy of the United States of America. The module introduces the main theoretical and conceptual debates concerning US foreign policy; focuses on the institutions and processes of US foreign and defence policy-making; analyses the individual, governmental, societal and external sources of US foreign policy; and offers opportunities for understanding and explaining the place of the US within the international system and its relationship with other states and non-state actors. Several contemporary issues and challenges facing the US in its foreign relations will be analysed including international terrorism, the use of military force, the perceived threats from Iran and North Korea, the US role in the international system, and the question of American decline.

Module aims

Module aims:

- to introduce the main theoretical and conceptual debates relevant to a detailed analysis of the place of the United States within contemporary international relations and in particular foreign policy analysis;
- develop understanding and interpretation of the institutions and processes of foreign and defence policy-making within the United States;
- to facilitate analysis of the individual, governmental, societal and external sources of US foreign and defence policy;

to offer opportunities for understanding and explaining of the United States' place within the international system and its relationship with other states and non-state actors;
to offer informed discussion of several contemporary issues and challenges facing the United States in its foreign relations;
to develop students' skills in the effective collection and interpretation of information from diverse sources;
to develop students' abilities to argue cogently, concisely and critically.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

Part One (Term 1 Weeks 1-4)

addresses different theoretical approaches to foreign policy analysis and how they can be applied to the United States;

explores the significance of American national identity, values and beliefs for foreign policy making;

puts changes and continuities in contemporary US foreign policy in historical context;

and locates the construction of the national interest under the Bush, Obama and Trump administrations.

Part Two (Term 1 Weeks 5-10) looks at the processes, actors and institutions involved in the making of US foreign policy such as:

the President, the National Security Council, the State Department, Pentagon, and Intelligence agencies ;

Congress;

think tanks, NGOs and interest groups;

the media and American public opinion;

and the international system.

Part Three (Term 2 Weeks 1-10) considers a number of contemporary issues in US foreign policy such as:

Russia and Europe;

nuclear non-proliferation;

international terrorism;

the threat and use of force;

the Middle East;

Africa and Latin America;

the role of soft power and popular culture;

and the Asia-Pacific.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- to demonstrate an advanced knowledge of the theoretical and conceptual debates germane to an understanding of US foreign policy;

- to evaluate critically the characteristics of and issues raised by key facets of US foreign and defense policy making and their consequences;
- to demonstrate an ability to locate the study of the US in the international system within broader debates within the disciplines of International Relations and/or Foreign Policy Analysis;
- to be familiar with a wide range of classic and contemporary academic literature on US foreign policy;
- to be able to critically analyse complex ideas, both orally and in writing, with relation to contemporary US foreign policy.

Study

Study time

Type	Required
Lectures	18 sessions of 1 hour (6%)
Seminars	18 sessions of 1 hour (6%)
Private study	264 hours (88%)
Total	300 hours

Private study description

The module is taught through a combination of a weekly one-hour lecture and a compulsory one-hour seminar the following week. Seminars are an opportunity to explore in depth particular issues and to engage in discussion in a small group context. Students will be expected to contribute fully to such discussions each week based on in-depth preparation. Students will also be expected to engage in intensive independent study, employing the reading lists provided to deepen their knowledge of the subject. In addition to attendance at lectures and seminars, students should spend 8-10 hours per week on own independent study for the module.
