Description

Introductory description

We will address questions of how globalisation (media, travel, etc) has facilitated new spaces and modes of cultural representation. We will also explore Post-race theory in the context of post-colonial negotiation of place of race, history in engagement with cultural forms. In seminars that include practical elements, we will explore issues that arise in contemporary intercultural performance interactions through examples like the work of Brook, Mnouchkine, Japanese Takarazuka, Disney, contemporary Australian musicals, and African exhibitions. We will critically analyse cultural difference, the possible processes of mediation necessary in such work; the difference between inter- and multiculturalism, the impact of cultural imperialism and globalisation on performance production, and the aesthetic and ethical issues of this work.

Module aims

This module sets out to look at the implications of contemporary intercultural performance practice in the context of globalisation in terms of form, focus, ideological and ethical implications.

Research element

Essay: Research how interculturalism manifests itself in contemporary practices, and then the ability to critically analyse the issues related to universalist and post-colonial perspectives.

Relate theory to aesthetics

Practical presentations require students to research a specific issue that has emerged for them from the module and present it using appropriate form. This requires the negotiation between research and understanding practical forms they have engaged in the course, and a clear understanding of the impact of aesthetics chosen.

Interdisciplinary

This module requires students to situate works historical, and then read theatrical decisions against specific sociological and political theory; analysing implications. It also asks students to engage with new media when considering performance.

International

The curriculum spans analysis of cross-cultural and critical examples of theatre and performance from Europe, Africa, Asia, North and South Americas and Australia.

Subject specific skills

The ability to

- critically analyse cultural differences and to examine the processes of their mediation through the various cultures in and through theatre and performance;
- articulate an understanding of the concepts of (1) cultural in relation to identity and aesthetics, (2) the difference between inter- and multiculturalism, and (3) the impact of cultural imperialism and globalisation in relation to theatre production
- analyse how theatre as a form can both reflect and challenge ideas of cultural representation and expression

Transferable skills

Analysis

Undertake theoretical and situated - examples of intercultural engagement in actual and specific social settings

Co-operative theatre making

Using performance practice to provoke and facilitate social debate

Good written and oral communication skills

Assessment

You do not need to pass all assessment components to pass the module.

Assessment group A1

| | Weighting | Study time | Eligible for self-certification |
|--|-----------|------------|---------------------------------|
| Assessment component | | | |
| Essay | 30% | 60 hours | No |
| Students are invited to choose from a lit of topics that raise specific issues around intercultural performance practices from a theoretical and practical perspectives and asked to critically discuss these, using specific examples, and include a full bibliography. They may also negotiate a specific, personally defined topic with me as an alternative. | | | |

Reassessment component is the same

| | | | |
|--|-----|----------|----|
| Assessment component | | | |
| Research Presentation | 50% | 81 hours | No |
| 50% (exam equivalent). In groups of 2 - 5, students lead the group through an interactive presentation (e.g. performance, structured workshop, exhibition, active lecture) of research that they have conducted on a question that has emerged from their exploration of contemporary intercultural theatre practices. The aim of your piece is primarily to provoke discussion/ debate on the issue you have chosen to | | | |

| | Weighting | Study time | Eligible for self-certification |
|--|-----------|------------|---------------------------------|
| highlight. Criteria for assessment: | | | |
| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> evidence of significant research on your chosen topic/ issue sufficient problematising of the concepts for and with your audience good interaction with your audience, evidence that you have considered them in the content and form of your presentation (i.e. facilitated discussion) | | | |

Reassessment component

| | |
|--------------------------------------|----|
| Reflection of performance project | No |
|--------------------------------------|----|

The student would write up a critical reflection on the project - extending the critical review into a substantial piece of writing that would sketch the research questions, research undertaken, reasons for aesthetic choice of form and aims and objectives of the presentation. They would also critique their own place and learning in the project.

Assessment component

| | | | |
|----------|-----|----------|----|
| Critique | 20% | 30 hours | No |
|----------|-----|----------|----|

Your critical review should document the students' research, in relation to the group as a whole, through references and a bibliography, as well as analyse the processes leading to the presentation. Rather than being a descriptive account, the critique should demonstrate an understanding of the relationship between the research process, the working processes undertaken and the presentation itself; in relation to the overall aims and objectives of the module. It may be submitted in a variety of forms which could include: research information, photographic evidence, visual material and any other documents that has been central to the process.

Reassessment component

|--------------------------------------|----|
| Reflection of performance project | No |
|--------------------------------------|----|

See above. if the student is unable to perform in the group project, they will not be able to write the critical review. Then these 2 assessments must be conflated into a larger, written critical reflection on the practical processes involved in the practical examination and review.

Feedback on assessment

Written feedback on essay, practical presentation and critical review.
Oral feedback on Presentation and written components, if sought.
