Description

Introductory description

The aim of this module is to provide students with insights into human behaviour that can be easily translated into actions they can take to create more ethical environments.

Module web page

Module aims

Building on theoretical models and empirical evidence from philosophy, economics and psychology, the module will explore various methods of measuring and evaluating ethical behaviour as well as show how people are often influenced, subconsciously, by psychological biases, organizational and social pressures, and situation factors that impact decision making and can lead to unethical action. It will familiarise students with recent research developments in behavioural ethics and the possible implications for theory and policy raised by these developments.

The module is aimed at both those who wish to follow the MSc in Behavioural and Economic Science (Economics Track) as well as those who wish to follow the MSc in Behavioural and Economic Science (Science Track).
