Module aims

In the first term, we will introduce different business structures, and consider the business' various stakeholders, focusing on the company, its formation, and the differences and implications of forming private or public companies. We will proceed to discuss fundamental principle of corporate law, such as separate corporate personality and limited liability, and consider their consequences in the context of enterprise groups. We will also consider how the corporate form may be disregarded, namely how the corporate (metaphorical) 'veil' separating between the company and the shareholders may be 'pierced', and whether there are (or should be) other ways to make shareholders/parent companies responsible for debts or harms caused by companies/subsidiaries. We will then explore how the companies themselves interact with external stakeholders and discuss companies' contractual rights and liabilities. Next, we will discuss matters related to shareholding and equity finance. We will explore the way shareholders invest in a company, and examine the theories, policies, and rules concerning the share capital, with a special emphasis on how share capital may be reduced or increased, and issues related to class rights of shareholders. Finally, we will explore the rules and underlying policies concerning dividends/distributions to company shareholders.

In the second term, we will address issues related to corporate governance, and in this regard the range of directors' duties originating in common law and codified in the Companies Act 2006. Following an overview of the duties, we will consider who owes them and to whom, paying special attention to the underlying policy debate. We will examine the internal effects of directors acting outside the company constitution and powers, before looking at the remaining duties – to promote the success of the company; to exercise independent judgment, the duty of care, skill, and diligence; the duty to avoid a conflict of interest – and at directors' liabilities for breach of duty. We will then discuss shareholders' remedies against directors, such as the unfairly prejudicial remedy and derivative actions. Next, we will turn our attention to the what may be called the 'creditor-regarding' duties of directors as defined in the Companies Act 2006 and the wrongful trading provision in the Insolvency Act 1986. We then address issues related to corporate borrowing, secured creditors, and company charges, before looking at the objectives, principles, and key rules governing corporate insolvency, including aspects of cross-border insolvency.
