Module aims

This module will focus on the legal, theoretical and practical aspects of bank regulation and supervision, with a particular focus on 'current' events. It will analyse the issues relating to banking from the perspective of private and public law. It will first outline the rationale of why we need regulation and supervision. It will focus on the domestic, European and international statutes, directives and standards respectively that have shaped the way their activities are overseen. Banks are regulated domestically but their activities invariably transcend their borders internationally. It will focus on the practical steps to regulate their activities such as consolidated supervision, capital adequacy, large exposure rules and the fit and proper criteria that need to be fulfilled by the institutions and individuals themselves on a continuous basis. It will critically evaluate the policy considerations that have come and gone to enhance the effectiveness of these tools.
