Description

Introductory description

Law and the economy are intimately connected: law affects economic behaviour, performance, and development, which in turn affect how law is structured, operates, and evolves. The module introduces students to a prominent way to study of these connections – the 'economic analysis of law' (sometimes referred to simply as 'law & economics').

Module aims

The module aims to provide students with a solid knowledge of the basic principles of economics that can improve their understanding of legal rules, doctrines, and procedures. The module demonstrates the value of applying economic reasoning and economic methodologies to the analysis of problems in familiar areas of law, such as property, contract, tort, crime, and more.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

The topics that will be covered in this module include: introduction to law & economics; economics of crime; economics of property rights; economics of contract law; economics of tort law; economics of corporate law; economics of intellectual property; economics of competition law; limitations and extensions of law & economics

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Develop a good knowledge of the basic principles of economics that are relevant for lawyers
- Recognise why any discussion of existing or proposed legal rules requires comparative institutional analysis
- Critically evaluate the use of economic evidence and advice in the adoption of policy
- Critically assess the theoretical, empirical, and normative limitations of the economic analysis of law
- Understand recent developments in law & economics
