Introductory description

PH997 Topics in Metaphysics and Epistemology

Module web page

Module aims

This module will offer students critical engagement with a key topic or topics in Metaphysics and Epistemology through the careful study and discussion of seminal works in the area. Students will be expected to engage critically with the main arguments of the selected texts, and the philosophical positions presented in them. They will be expected to articulate their own views of the relative strengths and weaknesses of these arguments and positions.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

This module considers the interrelations between metaphysical and epistemological issues within the sphere of philosophy of action. It discusses two approaches to the metaphysics of intentional action: the Causal Theory of Action (broadly following Donald Davidson), and an account of intentional action in terms of the agent's practical knowledge of what she is doing (broadly following Elizabeth Anscombe). We consider how key notions such as cause, reason, intention, and explanation, function in each approach, and consider the core motivations and challenges each approach faces. In addition to considering how issues in metaphysics and epistemology matter in the more concrete context of action-theory, we will also explore how one's metaphysical and epistemological commitments in this sphere matter to broader philosophical concerns, including most centrally in philosophy of science, and ethics.

Syllabus (subject to possible minor adjustment):

Week 1. Introduction: The Metaphysics and Epistemology of Intentional Action

Week 2. The Causal Theory of Action: Motivations and Challenges

Week 3. Agent's knowledge on the Causal Theory: "Action-Awareness"

Week 4. Agent's knowledge on the Causal Theory: Reasons, evidence, and inference

Week 5. Velleman's Synthesis: The Causal Theory and "Anscombean" Practical Knowledge

Week 6. READING WEEK: No seminar

Week 7. The Practical Knowledge View: Motivations and Challenges

Week 8. Practical knowledge, practical reasoning, and Anscombe's special question 'Why?'

Week 9. Practical knowledge and knowledge-how

Week 10. Practical knowledge, desire, and the good: Anscombe on 'practical truth'

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- By the end of the module the student should be able to have a systematic and advanced understanding and knowledge of the texts covered in the module, the main arguments of the texts, and critical responses to those arguments.
- By the end of the module the student should be able to communicate at an advanced level clearly and substantively in speech and in writing on the questions addressed in the module. They should be able to provide critical analysis of the relevant texts.
- By the end of the module the student should be able to work autonomously to articulate their own view of the relative merits of arguments, methodologies and positions in the literature, and engage critically with other points of view.
- Students should be able to demonstrate the skills involved in philosophical discussion, they will have improved abilities to analyse and critically assess complex concepts and arguments. They will be able to communicate at an advanced level clearly and substantively in speech, as well as in writing, the philosophical arguments and concepts covered in the texts. They will be able to demonstrate sound judgement and initiative in selecting appropriate texts and methods for their investigation of a specifically circumscribed problem and should have acquired an advanced ability to pursue and organize philosophical research, documenting research carefully, and showing the ability to engage independently in philosophical debate.

Research element

The module will be assessed by a long capstone essay, which must be the product of the student's own research, and should not simply re-hash the delivered content. Students are encouraged to use the provided reading list as a jumping-off point for this research.

Subject specific skills

- (i) The capacity to read key texts concerning the metaphysics and epistemology of intentional action.
- (ii) The capacity to explain key arguments and positions found in the module reading material.
- (iii) To develop an appreciation of the strengths and weaknesses of the positions and arguments found in the texts covered by the module, and to be able to analyse and assess these positions and arguments in written and oral work.
- (iv) To work effectively with peers in group-oriented work on action-theory, and to communicate and think about the metaphysics and epistemology of intentional action in a seminar environment

Transferable skills

- (i) To acquire the capacity to read demanding material effectively and critically.
- (ii) To develop the capacity to explain demanding ideas and arguments clearly, briefly and accurately.

(iii) To think creatively about problems by deploying the capacity for clear thinking and reasoning

(iv) To work collaboratively and sensitively with others in a group environment, and to develop the self-confidence to communicate effectively in a group environment.
