Description

Introductory description

The 10,000-word MA dissertation (15,000 words for double degree students) addresses a single subject of the student's choice. The topic may concern any aspect of the subject matter of their programme, but may not fall decidedly in the realm of some other field, such as Economics.

You should take special care to formulate a dissertation topic that can be handled effectively in 10,000 words (15,000 words for double degree students) and in the limited preparation period of less than four months. Dissertation titles are agreed with the dissertation title and plan advisor and approved by the External Examiner.

The dissertation is an exercise in independent study in which you pursue a topic that interests you in greater depth than is possible in a research essay. It allows you to further develop your skills of literature search and bibliography construction, theoretical argument, appraisal of empirical evidence and judgement.

Please note the difference in dissertation length for students on single MA programmes and students on a Double Degree programme with one of our international partner universities. Single degree students must not exceed 10,000 words. Double degree students must not exceed 15,000 words.
