Description

Introductory description

This applied module offers students the opportunity to think through current trends affecting higher education, distil differences and similarities between higher education systems in different world regions, and engage creatively with higher education decision-making processes and policy challenges. The module is highly interactive and challenges students to design policy proposals; simulate decision-making processes; apply concepts learned during the module to analyse higher education in different national contexts and engage in comparative analysis.

Module aims

- Gaining a broad and comparative perspective on the major trends currently affecting higher education internationally.
- Demonstrating awareness of differences and similarities between higher education systems across world regions and across national contexts.
- Developing familiarity with relevant higher education data sources and the use of data to support higher education research and policy.
- Engaging critically and creatively with policy challenges affecting higher education and the multi-stakeholder processes underlying change in higher education.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

The module will be structured in two distinct phases. During phase 1 of the module, several major trends affecting higher education internationally are introduced and discussed. These trends include (1) massification, diversification, stratification, and quality assurance, (2) access and equity, (3) flexible pathways and tertiary education, (4) internationalisation and the student experience. Activities included in Phase 1 will offer students opportunities to discern through the challenges associated with policy change in higher education.

Phase 2 of the module will focus on discussing the major trends listed above in the context of different world regions: (1) Africa and Middle East, (2) Asia and Oceania, (3) South and North America, (4) Europe. In Phase 2, students are asked to apply the concepts and trends discussed in Phase 1 to understand higher education in an assigned national context. In the form of a 'conference symposium' and over the course of four seminars, students will be asked to present the higher education system of their assigned national context. At the end of Phase 2 (and the module) students are asked to write an essay in which they compare the higher education system in their assigned country (and presented in the 'conference symposium') and a second country of their choice.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Show a systematic understanding of higher education systems and a critical awareness of current problems in the field.
- Deal with complex issues both systematically and creatively, make sound judgement in the absence of complete data, and communicate their conclusions clearly to specialist and non-specialist audiences.
- Practice decision-making in complex and unpredictable situations.
- Continue to advance their knowledge and understanding, and to develop new skills to a high level.
