Module aims

This module aims to offer a detailed consideration of a research-related case study in film and/or television/related screen media, enabling final year students to pursue an area of study in a significant amount of depth. The module places emphasis on seminar work and independent research and learning, this contributing to the overall aim of our degrees in fostering increasing intellectual independence in students through research, seminar contribution and assessed written work. For example, the outline syllabus below presents an indication of the thematic and historical areas that would be addressed, and related teaching materials, for a research-led module Indian Cinemas: Cultures and Contestations which explores the cinemas in India including Hindi, Bengali, and Tamil cinemas. It covers film from a range of periods in Indian cinema from the silent era to contemporary LGBTQ films from the Hindi film industry, often popularly shortened to Bollywood. It investigates the way in which nationalism, the anti-colonial struggle, the Nation-state, and Stars influence Indian cinemas as well as exploring the avant-garde and neo-noir in Indian cinemas. The module also pays special attention to concepts of queer film in India, including examining homonormativity through popular diaspora films made by Karan Johar, the role of film in the 'public emergence' of the lesbian movement in India, and the new proliferation of LGBTQ identities on film through television, web series, and online content. Films studied will include Hindi films such as Mother India (Mehboob Khan, 1957), Amar Akbar Anthony (Manmohan Desai, 1997); Bengali film Ghaire-Baire (Satyajit Ray, 1984); films from south India including Jigarthanda (Karthik Subbaraj, 2014) and Ka Bodyscapes (Jayan Cherian, 2016), as well as queer films including Fire (Deepa Mehta, 1996).
