Description

Introductory description

This is an elective module available for WBS and non-WBS students. To find detailed availability and to apply for this module, log in to my.wbs.ac.uk using your normal IT login details and apply via the my.wbs module application system. Once you've secured a place on my.wbs you should apply via your home department's usual process, which usually takes place via eVision. Note that you do not require the module leader's permission to study a WBS module, so please do not contact them to request it.

As customers, we can all reflect on customer experiences that have been outstanding, and those that have been infuriating. How we feel about brands that offer either exceptional or terrible customer experiences determines how likely we are to purchase again from that brand, whether we are retained as customers and how likely we are to become loyal to that brand. Customer experience (CX) is everything related to a business that affects a customer's perception and their feelings about it.

Customer expectations have increased and this is putting more pressure on organisations to balance the experience they want to offer customers and limited internal resources and other priorities. However, for many organisations, customer experience is their key differentiator. Attracting and retaining customers in an ultra-competitive business environment is not easy, and companies that ignore the importance of providing a seamless, effective customer experience can end up losing out to competitors who understand that it's the customer who defines good service.

In this module we are going to explore the relationship between a business and its customers and all the ways that customers interact with companies across the customer journey. We will consider the frameworks, concepts and tools used in the Customer Experience field and explore some key themes and issues facing marketers today. We will take a practical approach to understanding how to create, develop, understand and measure customer experiences. This module requires student participation in discussions and activities and will be a lively module with a focus on putting theory into practice.
