Description

Introductory description

The module provides students with an understanding of the antecedents and consequences of behaviour in organisations, with particular emphasis on the management process.

Module aims

The module has both intellectual and practical aims. Intellectually, the module takes a broad view of organisational behaviour and explores the links between psychology, organisational psychology, organisational sociology and management science as an aid to an understanding of people's behaviour and experience of work in organisations.

At a practical level, the module examines current organisational practices such as motivation and team working. This reflects the fact that the vast majority of students taking the module are pursuing careers in management and/or in public agencies concerned with work and employment. It is in these very organisations where familiarity with, and expertise in, these areas are of key importance.

An understanding of the interaction between people and the organisations in which they work is key to the development of the analytical, problem-solving, and management skills which are the key focus of the Warwick MBA degree.

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.

- 1: What is Organizational Behaviour? Key Concepts, Approaches and Implications
- 2: Motivation
- 3: Groups and Teams
4. Organisational Culture
- 5: Organisational Structure
- 6: Power
- 7: Ethics
- 8: Institutions

Learning outcomes

By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Demonstrate a comprehensive understanding of how organisational behaviour has evolved as a field, including its foundations in individual and collective action, and the roles of culture, power and ethics
- Demonstrate critical familiarity with the literature, both theoretical and practical, located within its historical and methodological context
- Demonstrate a critical appreciation of how ethical considerations are central to managerial decision making in the broader socio-political context
- Critically reflect upon the main challenges organisational behaviour faces today, on how these relate to current organisations, and on how organisational behaviour can underpin our understanding of what management and leadership entail
