Description

Introductory description

This module is designed to offer a critical overview of what can be described as the legal and regulatory foundations of the contemporary global economy. The module will introduce and examine aspects of international economic law within its longer imperial history and its contemporary evolving context of economic, political, social and cultural globalization. It will provide an overview of the legal and other regulatory foundations of the global economy and critically consider the operations of the main global institutions and frameworks governing international economic relations. The course will also consider the role of international economic actors, both state and non-state, in shaping and influencing these regulatory frameworks.

The module will situate international economic law within a broader understanding of its interactions with other international and national, legal and non-legal processes and examine its role in the constitution of the contemporary global economy. Emphasis is placed upon the manner in which international economic law constructs international economic relations, inasmuch as it regulates the behaviour of international economic actors and global economic activity, as well as some of its major contradictions.

This module aims to provide the foundation and context for the substantive topics covered in other options in the programme. It will locate international economic law within the economic and geopolitical environment in which it operates, including the pivotal role of the state, and provide the critical framework for further exploration of these areas in other modules.

Module aims

To introduce students to the historical background and contemporary legal, regulatory and policy framework of international economic law

To provide a critical overview of the major institutions, regulatory networks, legal structures and dispute settlement processes of contemporary international economic law

To evaluate the purpose and rationale of international economic law and to locate its operations and substantive rules and processes within the broader social, economic and political contexts in which it operates

To critically analyse the effects of international economic law on the different constituencies, including states, communities, intergovernmental and non-governmental organisations, corporations and individuals

Outline syllabus

This is an indicative module outline only to give an indication of the sort of topics that may be covered. Actual sessions held may differ.
